SYMPOSIUM

The First European Symposium on Aircraft Recycling held in December 2013 assembled more than sixty participants from ten countries. Aircraft Recycling policies and goals seem to be well defined, but are the technologies, logistics, and processes already in place for the relevant aircraft end of life management activities?

The second European Aircraft Recycling Symposium in March 2015 will focus on selected materials which are promising value added in recycling, or which currently are a challenge to a closed materials life cycle. Moreover, strategies for ecodesign and business models for implementing material cycles originating from aircraft applications will be discussed.

The results of the symposium will benefit not only recycling companies, but also the stakeholders in the aircraft life cycle such as fleet operators, leasing companies, producers and first tier suppliers which are becoming involved in the end of life activities.

The symposium and conference proceedings language will be English.
