NARRATIVES IN/OF CRIMINOLOGY

Convenor

Holger Schmidt
Siegen

Narratives are a fundamental part of how society deals with crime. When something is interpreted and reacted to as 'criminal', stories are told and thus meaningful and preferably convincing representations of the course of events are established. Narratives are not 'truthful' representations of social reality. Rather, they take on a constitutive role in the (linguistic) establishment of a reality of crime that is both controversial and fragile. During the workshop, crime and punishment are addressed as well as the study of these topics as narrative events in an interdisciplinary manner.
