Scope

The new Aluminum Science and Technology conference is the first "European Conference on Aluminium Alloys - ECAA" - organized in 2011 by DGM.

The conference provides a platform for academic and industrial researchers, scientists and engineers to present and discuss the recent development and progress made in Aluminium, covering:

- Fundamental aspects of its alloy development and (physical) metallurgy
- Microstructure evolution and related properties
- Industrial fabrication and processing
- Conventional and advanced products and customer applications.

The conference addresses industry as well as academia and especially emphasizing the strong connection between the two. It also encourages participation and acquainting of young engineers and students.

Keynote and overview presentations are planned on Aluminium issues by :

- a) academics on the frontiers of fundamental and applied science, like alloy design and advanced processing including computational modeling.
- b) industrials on Aluminium technology-based issues and processing, including applied simulation along the entire process chain and
- c) customers on recent application and markets issues, such as transport, packaging and building.

So the conference intends to provide insight into modern science, conventional and new Aluminium alloys and processes, an understanding of evolving microstructures, compositions and properties and new aspects and recent developments of Aluminium physical and mechanical metallurgy.
